

Mission Statement and Values

Science Doubt has a project underway to come up with a mission and values statement. It has been taken on by a very good friend, who is attempting to provide a top notch product. The below is the contents of an e-mail to him to provide some guidelines. This is included here to temporarily fill the void in the administrative page of Science Doubt's site. Look here in the future to see the actual statement when available.

Steve:

My thoughts on the mission statement can come from the items on the home page, reasons for doubt, and why use this site.

The following things can go into the statement and values:

For the dissemination of counter-dogmatic info, safe environment to discuss new ideas, honor, integrity, commitment, civility, welcoming/inviting, honesty, openness, trust (privacy/safeguarding), simplicity, humble, use of critical-eye, thinking outside the box, common-sense over education, easy to read, and practical application/experiment.

These are just ideas that may or may not need to be included. If you see something I missed please incorporate it.

Thanks
